Opening Overview

Markets faced renewed pressure as higher Treasury yields and renewed pressure on oil dominated the macro landscape. The 10-year Treasury yield approached a 20-year high, reflecting persistent inflation concerns and reduced expectations for rate cuts. This increase in the discount rate typically weighs on long-duration growth stocks, whose future earnings are valued less highly. Concurrently, oil prices surged above $103 per barrel, further complicating the inflation outlook and potentially impacting consumer spending. This combination of higher borrowing costs and energy inflation created a challenging environment, particularly for portfolios with significant exposure to growth-oriented technology and interest-rate sensitive assets. The broader market reaction suggests a repricing of risk given these macro shifts, with some analysts noting the largest yield surge since 2007. US Treasury yields soar.

Top Movers

Symbol	Company	Price	Change	Reason
CLS	Celestica	$361.84	+1.61%	Celestica received a rating upgrade from Seeking Alpha. source
OXB	OXB	$487.00	+1.25%	OXB announced it won 17 new clients, indicating expansion. source
META	Meta Platforms	$744.10	+1.02%	Keybanc raised Meta Platforms' price target to $900 from $780. source
GRAB	Grab	$3.20	+0.95%	Grab acquired a 60% majority stake in Atome Financial for $1.49 billion. source
MSFT	Microsoft	$500.59	+0.52%	Microsoft was upgraded to Buy by analysts, citing AI and Azure momentum. source

ACHR	Archer Aviation	$5.71	+0.35%	Archer announced a deal with Boeing to shape the future of aerospace and defense AI. source
-------------	-----------------	--------	---------------	---

Today's top movers largely reflected company-specific catalysts and continued optimism around artificial intelligence. Microsoft and Meta Platforms both benefited from analyst upgrades and increased price targets, with Microsoft's momentum specifically tied to its AI and Azure cloud offerings. Archer's deal with Boeing further underscored the strategic importance of AI in aerospace. Elsewhere, Celestica received a rating upgrade, while Grab's acquisition of Atome Financial and OXB's new client wins highlighted successful corporate expansion and strategic growth initiatives. This suggests a market willing to reward strong individual corporate performance and clear AI-driven narratives, even amidst broader macro headwinds.

Sector Highlights

The market saw a notable divergence in sector performance, largely influenced by the macro environment. Sectors sensitive to interest rates and future growth expectations, such as clean energy and semiconductors, experienced headwinds. The broader technology sector, particularly those with long-duration growth profiles, felt the impact of higher Treasury yields. Conversely, specific niches within technology, such as video gaming and robotics, showed some resilience, suggesting a more nuanced investor approach rather than a wholesale retreat from innovation. Energy-related sectors, while not explicitly detailed in the ETFs, would likely have benefited from the surge in oil prices, though this was offset by broader market concerns.

Notable Declines

Symbol	Company	Price	Change	Reason
ASTS	AST SpaceMobile	$59.98	-5.83%	Investors were reminded of the upcoming securities class action lawsuit deadline. source
SIDU	Sidus Space	$2.01	-5.63%	Sidus Space reported Q2 2026 earnings with revenue falling 53.8% and widening losses. source

NVTS	Navitas Semiconductor	$11.84	-4.98%	Navitas Semiconductor reported a wider-than-expected loss, overshadowing its revenue beat. source
RR	Richtech Robotics	$1.65	-4.62%	N/A
ONDS	Ondas	$7.40	-4.15%	Millions of Ondas shares were cleared for resale, increasing potential selling pressure. source
NBIS	Nebius Group	$226.61	-4.03%	Nebius Group received a 'Sell' rating from Rothschild Redburn. source
OKLO	Oklo	$38.82	-4.03%	Oklo's stock saw its fair value cut as analysts weighed growth against execution risk. source
GOOG	Alphabet (Class C)	$334.98	-3.58%	N/A

Declines were a mix of company-specific setbacks and broader market repricing. Sidus Space and Navitas Semiconductor both reported disappointing earnings, with the latter's wider loss contributing to the general weakness seen in the semiconductor space. Ondas shares faced selling pressure due to a large block cleared for resale, while Oklo's fair value was cut amidst execution risks. The absence of specific catalysts for Google's decline, alongside Navitas's performance, suggests that broader tech and growth names are feeling the pinch from higher Treasury yields, which increase the cost of capital and discount future earnings more aggressively.

ETFs & Other Holdings

Symbol	Holding	Price	Change
SGLN	iShares Physical Gold	£296.56	-1.80%
INRG	iShares Global Clean Energy Transition (Dist)	£7.50	-1.54%
NUCG	VanEck Uranium and Nuclear Technologies (Acc)	£38.89	-0.70%
SMH	VanEck Semiconductor (Acc)	£112.32	-0.69%
WATBI	WisdomTree Artificial Intelligence (Acc)	£100.00	-0.64%

WTAI	WisdomTree Artificial Intelligence (Acc)	£122.80	-0.04%
ESPO	VanEck Video Gaming and eSports (Acc)	£64.80	+0.33%
BOTZ	Global X Robotics & Artificial Intelligence (Acc)	£23.78	+0.20%

Collective ETF movements indicated a cautious shift away from broad growth and commodity exposure. The decline in iShares Physical Gold (SGLN) suggests reduced safe-haven demand or the impact of higher real yields. Funds tracking clean energy (INRG), uranium (NUCG), semiconductors (SMH), and broad AI (WTAI) all saw declines, reflecting pressure on long-duration assets and future-oriented technologies due to rising interest rates. However, VanEck Video Gaming and eSports (ESPO) and Global X Robotics & Artificial Intelligence (BOTZ) posted modest gains, suggesting selective strength and a nuanced approach to technology exposure, perhaps favouring more established or less rate-sensitive sub-sectors.
